

What employers have said about Ticket to Work

Both students we had as school based traineeship are now employees of the business.

Ticket to Work meant I was able to employ an enthusiastic and reliable worker.

Our owner decided to offer Jack paid work after the original 10 week work experience, it is working out really well Jack has been great for the business.

Customers just love her. I am sure we have customers that come in just because they want to be served by her.

He is here 10 minutes early every day. That brings a little bit of a smile to my face.

Her confidence grew. Approaching other staff members, starting conversations, approaching customers to take orders, not quote as shy.

We were really privileged to have her be part of the team. – I think it is important that they can be in the community and treated as equals, changing the mindset and looking at their capabilities not their disability.

Good for all staff involved. The rewards are great for them as they see the young people with disability get their qualification and gain skills.

I think everyone deserves a chance. Brock is pretty good at his job.

It's been a good experience and we are helping people to become aware (about being inclusive). I personally feel that everyone has the right to an opportunity to work and we are giving that here.

It has been fabulous to see him grow as a young kid, who didn't want to go to school, now he has finished school by having this opportunity. He loves working here. He has really grown and thrived by getting some responsibility.

Ticket to Work introduced us to young people that are enthusiastic, productive and grateful for the opportunity.

His maturity and confidence has gone out of site. He comes to work and gets straight into it. He enjoys it.
